J. B. N., Red Deer, Alta.: Is scrophularia efficacious in ailments of the throat?

Ann.—It takes in sufficient quantities of arsenic to put a stop to any ailment.

A. P. Stradecore, Ill.—A hotel man in this town is suffering from plague. He takes one five dollars and seems unable to cough it up. What would you suggest?

Ann.—Take it out over the hat.

You're now.

Mr. J. P. M. Whipple: A wealthy uncle of mine, aged 72, is run down; has poor appetite, and takes very little exercise. Needs a great deal. Has hallucinations that his end is not far

Ans.—Take him out to a moving picture show and cheer him up. Make him hop into a cold bath every morning and run five miles before breakfast. Throw a Collier into him and read him out the sturdiest intelligence in the morning paper. Canter him round the block several times before dinner. Throw three or four whistles into him and see him down to a T-bone steak and onions, with a tankard of Brooks' best beside his plate. A tempestuous moon will do him no harm. Rile him out to the laze.

grounds blue man after you, after having, of course, threatened, if a dozen more skeletons under his belt, or else a dozen. In the average band him $25 and start him off with them. Do not accompany him, if he comes home roaring and shouting at a man, he is cured. For fear of relapse keep on with the five mile run and the whiskey. If you are next of kin, give him all the whiskey he wants. Go easy on it. You will find the number of Thompson, the underaker, in the phone book.

F. O. B., Mound Jaw. Am afflicted

Ans.—Try scratching.

Miss M. P. G., Ontario. Young woman yawns frequently when commencing to sing. What will prevent this?

Ans.—Don't sing.

P. McG., Pincher Creek, Alta. Have friend who is just commencing to have an attack of the shillies. He is not ostentatious but imagines things, have managed to cut him down to two bottles of Scotch per diem. Cannot get nor sleep.

Ans.—Give him 10 to 15 broadside of potassium and put some knockout drops into his Scotch so that he may obtain a little sleep. Get him to take about half a bushel of calomel tablets. He be followed by ten of a dozen soldiers' powders. Let him have a stiff horn of whiskey when he needs it, but always when he wants it. Should he drop into a sleep, leave a lot of ooze by his bedside for him to take when he wakes. Chances are he will

3. Avoid irritating your patient: by telling him, during a venturing spell, that he will have to "let it out" or "it will get him sure." He knows that as well as you do. Minimize the seriousness of his sickness by relating confidential incidents compared with the last time you yourself and the d.t.'s. It will have a soothing effect. If he asks something to read, do not give him a copy of the Wide World Magazine with the usual front-page picture of a winter the unmetaphor of a canoe and a hungry crocodile making for him with its jaws open wide. Give him rather a copy of Mr. Fielding's speech in favor of Reverendry and let him laughing, would the patient show signs of laughing himself into hysterics, give him a lot of bread and, as soon as his stomach has had an era of repose, start the building-up process, with soup, more soup and still more soup. You're soup. Heavy on the soup. At this juncture the patient enters into the familiar old Never Again stage and incident clones. Till the next time.

The exam paper on history contains some puzzles. For example, they want you to describe "the character and policy of Oliver Cromwell." What Cromwell's policy was as king of the "Cavalier" party is one thing, but his policy as another party is another puzzle all by itself. I've known that Cromwell had a car on the side of his nose and had a car written about him by Thomas Carlyle, but as to what his policy was, or in what insurance company it was taken out, we are all at sea, like the Holy Roller. It probably was an enlighten-

Another question: "What was the New Learning? What brought it about? Mention some famous men associated with it, and its influence during what period did it arise?"
Ans. Never heard of it.

Another: "Write brief historical note on Charlotte Corday."
Ans. Charlotte Corday was stabbed in her bath by Marat, for whom she was posing for his famous painting, "Jenny Rising from the Sea."

Another question: "Who was Lord Durham?"

Ans. A monstrous bull, the progenitor of a well-known breed of cattle.

Q. Bull answer: "What was the Company of One Hundred Associates?"

Ans. When, and by whom was it formed?

Q. What did it promise to do? How were its promises carried out?"

Ans. Hanged if we know. Never heard of the One Hundred Associates. Possibly they might be related to the Hundred Thousand Club.

Q. But the paper on arithmetic takes the cake. It contains puzzles, not questions. How would you like to be

What amount of tea at 45c. per lb. should be mixed with 54 lbs. at 40c. per lb. to make a mixture worth 42c. per lb.?"

That is a straight puzzle and nothing else. It is no fair test of a man's proficiency in arithmetic. Personally, I couldn't solve it in a thousand years.

Here is another. Question number 16 in the paper: "A man bought a farm for $3,770. For 12½ acres he paid $40 an acre, for 23 acres $30 an acre, and the remainder $48 an acre. How many acres did the farm contain?" Question 11 runs as follows: "The income of John and James respectively surpassed that of William by 60% and 16%. All three had $22,320. Find the fortune of each."

Make a clear distinction between the words in each of the following pairs, and use each word correctly in a sentence:—(a) learn and teach, (b) moral and principle, (c) affect and effect (used as verbs), (d) statue and state, (e) healthy and wholesome, (f) stationary and stationery.

Calgary, like Winnipeg, is a city of useless young men. They all look cheerful enough and seem to like to be here, but single chaps who have leftness in the East to come West and to better themselves must occasionally feel a bit lonesome and long for the associations of the old life.
